We all learn differently. We all have our own ways of learning. Most of us can probably recall a time when something came easily to us. What was it about the learning experience that worked well? What was it that worked well? Perhaps a time when something didn’t work so well for us, and what did we do differently? What do you think would help you learn more effectively? Consider the following:

- Describe a time you learned something that you thought would help you learn but did not think would help you learn but did not work. Consider something that surprised you.
- Describe how you taught someone else something new.
- Think of a challenge you had while learning something new.
- Consider something you’ve tried to do, but haven’t been able to do.
- Consider something you now do regularly.
- Describe how you learned to do something you now do regularly.
- Describe a time you learned something that you now do regularly.
- Describe how you taught someone else something that you now do regularly.

We’d like to hear your story about how you think would help you learn but did not think would help you learn but did not work. Consider something that surprised you. Consider something that surprised you. Consider something that surprised you.

The goal of this site is to gather stories about unique learning styles. We’d like to hear your story about how you think would help you learn but did not think would help you learn but did not work. Consider something that surprised you. Consider something that surprised you. Consider something that surprised you.